

licts of interest that arise when reproductive technology can assist in the conception of a sibling donor. Similarly worth reading is the discussion of the psychosocial dimensions of hematopoietic stem-cell transplantation in pediatric patients. The author provides a comprehensive review of the existing research, including psychosocial outcomes, factors that affect compliance with and adjustment to the arduous procedure, and the potential for psychosocial intervention.

Case 10-2007: A 55-Year-Old Man Impaled in a Rowing Accident (March 29, 2007;356:1353-60). The first sentence of the second paragraph (page 1353) should have read "The patient, who was in excellent health, was sculling on the Charles River in Boston when his boat collided head-on at approximately 7:20 a.m. with an eight-person shell moving in the opposite direction; both boats were estimated to be traveling at 12 to 16 km per hour," rather than "traveling at 24 to 32 km per hour." Also, the third sentence of the sixth paragraph (page 1355) should have read "The trachea was intubated using a rapid-sequence-intubation protocol, with the addition of fentanyl, at 8:07 a.m." rather than "The trachea was intubated after the administration of fentanyl at 8:07 a.m." The text has been corrected on the Journal's Web site at www.nejm.org.

The Safety of Transdermal Nicotine as an Aid to Smoking Cessation in Patients with Cardiac Disease (December 12, 1996;335:1792-8) and Lack of Efficacy of Transdermal Nicotine in Smoking Cessation (October 7, 1999;341:1157-8). Dr. David O. Antonuccio's name was misspelled in both articles (page 1792 of the 1996 article and page 1157 of the 1999 letter). We regret the errors. The text has been corrected on the Journal's Web site at www.nejm.org.
